TECHNICAL EXPERTISE

In 2017 he received a double PhD degree in Civil Engineering at Silesian University of Technology (Poland) and University of Cassino (Italy). At present he is Assistant Professor of Geotechnical Engineering at the Silesian University of Technology (Poland) and PostDoc at the Charles University in Prague (Czech Republic). His research activity is focused on solving complex static and dynamic soil mechanics problems using novel numerical approaches. He has wide experience in numerical modelling of various complex geotechnical problems, e.g. tunnelling and deep excavation structures, off-shore wind turbines foundations subjected to monotonic and cyclic loading or computational fluid dynamics simulations for jet grouting. Currently, as a PostDoc in international (Czech Republic – China) research project he is involved in developing of new implicit & explicit constitutive models for soils dynamic response, such as High Cycle Accumulation (HCA) models, and numerical simulations of off-shore wind turbine structures subjected to extreme environmental loadings.
